For almost two centuries the historic Tremont neighborhood has rested on a bluff overlooking Cleveland's industrial valley. The sleepy farming community was transformed in 1867 when Cleveland annexed it. Factories attracted thousands of emigrants from Europe and industrialization gave rise to a class of wealthy businessmen. After the city prospered as a manufacturing center during World War II, deindustrialization and suburbanization fueled a huge population loss. About the Author: W. Dennis Keating is an emeritus professor of urban planning and law at Cleveland State University. He is co-author of Revitalizing Urban Neighborhoods and other publications on cities, urban policy, and housing.
